Caller tells police he killed his wife

September 29, 2008

BOSTON

Boston and State Police responded last night after a caller said he had killed his wife and would kill himself if police entered his apartment, near Massachusetts General Hospital. Officer Eddy Chrispin, a spokesman for the Boston Police Department, said a hostage negotiation team had been requested. The call came in about 10 p.m. from a unit on Emerson Place in the Charles River Park Apartments. An occupant of the apartment complex said he heard what sounded like backfiring from a car about 10 p.m.

NEW ENGLAND IN BRIEF

Caller tells police he killed his wife

September 29, 2008

BOSTON

Boston and State Police responded last night after a caller said he had killed his wife and would kill himself if police entered his apartment, near Massachusetts General Hospital. Officer Eddy Chrispin, a spokesman for the Boston Police Department, said a hostage negotiation team had been requested. The call came in about 10 p.m. from a unit on Emerson Place in the Charles River Park Apartments. An occupant of the apartment complex said he heard what sounded like backfiring from a car about 10 p.m.

regalar, verb
to give; to give away

We've already come across regalo, meaning a present. Regalar, to give, is the related verb.

¿Y si le regalamos un libro?
What about giving him a book?

Ayer fue mi cumpleaños. - ¿Qué te regalaron?
Yesterday was my birthday. - What did you get?

In some contexts you can translate regalar as to present.

En su jubilación le regalaron este reloj.
They presented him with this clock on his retirement.

Regalar also means to give something away.

Están regalando plumas.
They're giving away pens.

ordenar, verb
to order

We've already come across the noun orden, meaning order. The related verb is ordenar, to order. Just as in English, you can use it with a noun object.

El juez ordenó su detención.
The judge ordered his arrest.

You can also use it with a following verb to order somebody to do something. In that meaning, the most common construction is the subjunctive:

El policía nos ordenó que saliéramos* del edificio.
The policeman ordered us to leave the building.

Subject: Hotline Outage/this morning

Jack, I know you are looking at this – but a couple thoughts from my visit up there this morning:

For everyone, we went down (all systems) in the call center for approx 45 minutes early this morning. Came back on its own. From my perspective – it looks like we lost primary power to the computer room up there. The staff heard beeping out of the room, followed by a loss of the 1) monitors, 2) phone system and 3) the pc/network. Lights stayed on. Calls to 4500 were receiving a fast busy.

A few questions/action items:

- 1) do we have a diagram of the electrical feed for the room? I understand we also lost some lights in the 8th floor deli this morning.
- 2) What is our power back-up capacity? It sounds like we switched to back-up, and the beeping was indicating that our time was running out on the back-up. Any way to alert staff that back-up is engaged. That would give us time to escalate the primary issue and prepare for rerouting calls if our system was about to go down.
- 3) Where could we re-route calls to in the event of another outage like this?
- 4) Is there a way to front end the calls with an “experiencing problems” message instead of the fast busy?
- 5) Janine did a great job notifying everyone of the issue quickly – are there other notifications that should be made? How should they be made? Good practice for dealing with production issues we may run into post “go-live”
- 6) I understand we had a water issue in the computer room recently – what do we need to do to mitigate that risk?

Enough for now. Any feedback from anyone is appreciated. By end of day today would be great.

Thanks, Bill.

Dear Colleagues:

The mayor's Food And Fuel Summit was a real success because of all of you! □ Many people were served and received valuable information to sustain their felt needs. This summit's topics ranged from energy savings to food assistance, with workshops on how to □ weatherize your home □ to eating healthy foods cheaply.

Working with my cabinet colleague, Jim Hunt, and his staff was a real joy and very productive. There is much more our cabinets will do together and I look forward to our continued work together.

In addition, the performance of department heads and staff for OHS was outstanding! □
You performed as a team, and it was very satisfying to witness, from outreach to product delivery, all of you gave of yourselves.

My deep thanks to all of you!!

We are monitoring the current rain, as well as Tropical Storm Kyle.

Our latest update from a 1PM call today with the National Weather Service and communications with BWSC and Charles River Dam: Boston Received about 3" of rainfall yesterday. We expect an additional 1-3" today, and 2-4" more from Kyle tomorrow. We seem to be benefiting from some lulls that have allowed for sufficient drainage. It appears Kyle will upgrade to a Hurricane, but pass east of the Cape & Islands and have minimal wind impact on Boston.

This will be our final update, unless we see significant changes to weather forecasts or experience storm damage.

Subject: Update from 2:00PM National Weather Service Conference Call: Informational Purposes Only

The following is an update from the National Weather Conference Call at 2:00PM.

HEAVY RAIN/TROPICAL STORM KYLE - 2PM NOAA/NWS BRIEFING

The below briefing is an update to my earlier report. This information is based on MOEP's participation in today's 2PM teleconference with the National Weather Service (NWS) in Taunton and subsequent discussions with NWS, Charles River

Dam Flood Control, and Boston Water and Sewer Commission.

SUMMARY OF NOTABLE UPDATES

- NWS forecast for the Boston area remains mostly unchanged from their 9:00 AM briefing.
- Winds generated from Tropical Storm Kyle are not expected to have a major impact in Boston, with a forecast of 15-25 MPH, and potential for gusts up to 35 MPH.
- Low to minor flooding is a possibility for the Charles and Neponset rivers. (Note: Charles River Dam Flood Control plans mitigation steps to eliminate impact on Muddy River and Mother Brook.)
- Note: As of 3:30PM, Boston has had about 1.5" of rainfall.

FORECAST

A Flood Watch remains in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over tonight and through Saturday. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass east of Cape Cod & the Islands, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. Winds are not expected to have much of an impact, with anticipation of 15 to 25 MPH winds, and gusts up to 35 MPH. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

The following is informational only as we continue to monitor storm development.

The below briefing is based on our participation in today's 9AM teleconference with the NWS and subsequent discussions with their chief meteorologist related to two (2) incoming weather systems.

A Flood Watch is currently in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over the next 36 hours. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England late Saturday or early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass well east of Cape Cod & the Islands, computer models now have it drifting further west, potentially passing within 50-100 miles of the region. Being on the west side of the storm, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Another NWS teleconference is scheduled for 2PM today, and an updated briefing will be provided to you afterwards. In the meantime, please contact me should you have any questions or need additional information.

There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England late Saturday or early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass well east of Cape Cod & the Islands, computer models now have it drifting further west, potentially passing within 50-100 miles of the region. Being on the west side of the storm, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Another NWS teleconference is scheduled for 2PM today, and an updated briefing will be provided to you afterwards. In the meantime, please contact me should you have any questions or need additional information.

Mayor Thomas M. Menino today announced the city will be monitoring Tropical Storm Kyle over the next 24 hours and will add staff for possible emergency response situations when needed. Mayor Menino encourages all residents to take safety precautions.

The following is an update from the National Weather Service Conference Call at 2:00PM.

HEAVY RAIN/TROPICAL STORM KYLE – 2PM NOAA/NWS BRIEFING

The below briefing is an update to my earlier report. This information is based on MOEP's participation in today's 2PM teleconference with the National Weather Service (NWS) in Taunton and subsequent discussions with NWS, Charles River Dam Flood Control, and Boston Water and Sewer Commission.

SUMMARY OF NOTABLE UPDATES

- NWS forecast for the Boston area remains mostly unchanged from their 9:00 AM briefing.
- Winds generated from Tropical Storm Kyle are not expected to have a major impact in Boston, with a forecast of 15-25 MPH, and potential for gusts up to 35 MPH.
- Low to minor flooding is a possibility for the Charles and Neponset rivers. (Note: Charles River Dam Flood Control plans mitigation steps to eliminate impact on Muddy River and Mother Brook.)
- Note: As of 3:30PM, Boston has had about 1.5" of rainfall.

FORECAST

A Flood Watch remains in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over tonight and through Saturday. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass east of Cape Cod & the Islands, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. Winds are not expected to have much of an impact, with anticipation of 15 to 25 MPH winds, and gusts up to 35 MPH. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Subject: Update from 2:00PM National Weather Service Conference Call: Informational Purposes Only

The following is an update from the National Weather Conference Call at 2:00PM.

HEAVY RAIN/TROPICAL STORM KYLE – 2PM NOAA/NWS BRIEFING

The below briefing is an update to my earlier report. This information is based on MOEP's participation in today's 2PM teleconference with the National Weather Service (NWS) in Taunton and subsequent discussions with NWS, Charles River Dam Flood Control, and Boston Water and Sewer Commission.

SUMMARY OF NOTABLE UPDATES

- NWS forecast for the Boston area remains mostly unchanged from their 9:00 AM briefing.
- Winds generated from Tropical Storm Kyle are not expected to have a major impact in Boston, with a forecast of 15-25 MPH, and potential for gusts up to 35 MPH.
- Low to minor flooding is a possibility for the Charles and Neponset rivers. (Note: Charles River Dam Flood Control plans mitigation steps to eliminate impact on Muddy River and Mother Brook.)
- Note: As of 3:30PM, Boston has had about 1.5" of rainfall.

FORECAST

A Flood Watch remains in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over tonight and through Saturday. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass east of Cape Cod & the Islands, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. Winds are not expected to have much of an impact, with anticipation of 15 to 25 MPH winds, and gusts up to 35 MPH. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Subject: Flood Watch is in Effect - Informational Purposes Only

The following is informational only as we continue to monitor storm development.

The below briefing is based on our participation in today's 9AM teleconference with the NWS and subsequent discussions with their chief meteorologist related to two (2) incoming weather systems.

A Flood Watch is currently in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over the next 36 hours. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England late Saturday or early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass well east of Cape Cod & the Islands, computer models now have it drifting further west, potentially passing within 50-100 miles of the region. Being on the west side of the storm, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Another NWS teleconference is scheduled for 2PM today, and an updated briefing will be provided to you afterwards. In the meantime, please contact me should you have any questions or need additional information.

Forwarded for your information,
Elaine

Dear Michael,

I have attached a document explaining exactly where the SBNH is right now. It is more information than you likely want but you should be aware of the whole situation. It is not a pretty picture and in fact, we are in real danger of closing. Any help you can give would be much appreciated.

Tomorrow is the Ollie Road Race, pray that the rain holds off. Tonight is our last Family Fun Night at Carson Beach and I am headed out there now. I may be too old for this!

On a happy note, thanks very much for raising so many dollars for the Rodman Ride! So far, you are the leader of the pack. Have a nice weekend.

Love, B

Please join me at Harvard University to see a presentation of their AfricaMap project and to discuss our interest in possibly replicating this project for Boston.

The AfricaMap is a new initiative by Harvard's Center for Geographical Analysis (CGA) and the Institute of Quantitative Social Science that has grown to include partners from nearly every school across the University. AfricaMap was designed to provide a platform for networking, collaboration and data organization for Africa researchers at Harvard. It accesses spatial data from any public academic, government, or private web-based source—generating a constantly expanding central warehouse of information on Africa. As a public database, AfricaMap has the potential to foster collaboration across the boundaries of academic and government, both within Harvard and across the globe.

Its creators at Harvard have suggested that they would be open to collaborating with the City of Boston to launch a similar project for Boston. As with AfricaMap, the goal would be to create a forum for collaboration by bring the best ideas, research, and data about Boston together in a single place—making it easy for people in government, academia, or other organizations to identify shared interests and projects. While the initial launch would be populated by the Boston-based research being done at Harvard and publicly available data from the City, eventually it could be open to other universities and organizations across Boston—and indeed from around the world.

Please let me know if you will be attending. While I'm trying to keep the size of this initial discussion group manageable, if I've left out any key people, please let me know and I'll be sure they are invited. On the Harvard side, there will be a half-dozen faculty and staff from the CGA, Kennedy School, and one or two Arts and Sciences departments that are also involved. The meeting will likely be held at the CGA, but we'll finalize the location once we know how much space we need.

Thanks, Linda

DCR TO CLOSE STORROW DRIVE TUNNEL AT NIGHT TO FACILITATE TUNNEL REPAIRS

Overnight closures for several months will hasten completion of repairs

The Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR) plans to close both lanes of the Storrow Drive Tunnel from 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. each night beginning Sunday, September 28, and continuing for several months to expedite repairs inside the tunnel.

Engineers from DCR and SPS New England Inc., the agency's contractor, estimate that closing the tunnel each night until repairs are complete could result in the work being finished this spring, at least three months earlier than originally planned.

Earlier this month, DCR closed the tunnel at night for one week, as an experiment to see whether it would be feasible to use full night-time closure for the duration of the remaining repairs to hasten the end of the work. Nearby residents and commuters were invited to call or send emails with their thoughts. Also, DCR officials held a public meeting at the Boston Public Library on Thursday night, Sept. 25, and received positive feedback on the closure.

"The contractor has told us we can shave several months off this project if we close the tunnel completely every night for construction," said DCR Commissioner Richard K. Sullivan Jr. "The one-week experimental closure appears to have been a success: DCR received only a handful of emails and calls on the matter, and to a person, they were positive."

During nightly closures, SPS will be able to set up staging areas and work on both sides of the tunnel without endangering motorists, vehicles, or the work crews themselves. Work in the tunnel includes cleaning several steel beams, demolishing damaged tile walls, and repairing concrete. These interim repairs, costing about $11.5 million, are expected to extend the life of the tunnel another five years until a more extensive rehabilitation can be done.

Vehicles approaching the tunnel, which carries eastbound (inbound) traffic only, will be detoured across the Western Avenue and River Street bridges to Memorial Drive in Cambridge. Westbound (outbound) traffic will not be affected. Emergency vehicles will be allowed to travel through the tunnel during the hours it is closed, and accommodations will be made for traffic related to large sporting or cultural events in Boston.

DCR continues to invite neighborhood residents, commuters, and other interested parties to comment on the closure by e-mail to: dcr.updates@state.ma.us.

<<Local 26 - summary.doc>>

Rosie's Place is holding its annual Funny Women ... Serious Business event on October 16th at the Hynes Convention Center. Part of the contract with the Hynes is that they waive the room rental fee of $27,000 if we use their caterer, Aramark.

Aramark is facing job actions by its employees, Local 26, led by Janice Loux. While the contract issues have been settled everywhere in the U.S., they are still unsettled in Boston. Local 26 has contacted Rosie's Place and said that we will face a picket line at our event if we do not use another caterer than Aramark. Local 26 intimated they will be contacting our talent (Sarah Bernhard) to inform her of the picketing.

Rosie's Place sought other sites, but found there are not sites that are available on the 16th, large enough for 1600 people, or in Boston. We have explained this to Local 26 organizers, as well as the $27,000 fee we will face if we stay at the Hynes but use a different caterer. They were unmoved. We offered Local 26 an informational table and a full-page ad in our event program book. They were uninterested.

Subject: Mattapan BOTrade

Michael,

I have been assisting Stu Rosenberg, Ed Jay and Steve Busby as they, on behalf of the Mattapan Board of Trade, work up their solar installation proposal. Stu told me after the fact that they had met with you to request City backing for the project. Had I known, I would have advised him to wait a few weeks before meeting with you.

Galen Nelson and I met with the three in Mattapan to understand their proposal better. There are problems with the way they are structuring their idea--a complicated "third party financing" approach. But we want to help them get to a workable proposal, because we see merit in having business districts aggregate solar installations. If we can make it work in Mattapan, it might be replicable with Main Street districts.

Last week, after their meeting with you, I arranged for all of us to meet with Mark Barnett, a renewable energy expert attorney at Foley Hoag. Galen, Wilson Rickerson (Solar Boston consultant--excellent knowledge) and I joined them there. We are now working to help them restructure their approach to address several key problems that the Foley Hoag attorney and my team has identified.

Bottom line: Mattapan BOT understands that they are not ready to request $20,000 backing from anyone.

I am leaving the building now to assist Jim and Nancy prepare for Food and Fuel. Let me know if you want to speak further about this matter.

Subject: Flood Watch is in Effect - Informational Purposes Only

The following is informational only as we continue to monitor storm development.

The below briefing is based on our participation in today's 9AM teleconference with the NWS and subsequent discussions with their chief meteorologist related to two (2) incoming weather systems.

A Flood Watch is currently in effect for most of Southern New England, including Suffolk County through early Sunday. The rain, which has already begun, will produce heavy bands throughout MA over the next 36 hours. 3-5" is expected, with up to 6-8" in some areas. There is a lot of tropical moisture that is expected to present in two to three concentrated pulses of very heavy rainfall. Rainfall at rates of up to ½ to 1 inch within an hour has occurred in some areas to our south. Urban street flooding is expected.

Tropical Storm Kyle could reach hurricane force as it approaches New England late Saturday or early Sunday. Although it is expected to pass well east of Cape Cod & the Islands, computer models now have it drifting further west, potentially passing within 50-100 miles of the region. Being on the west side of the storm, Boston could see as much as an additional 1-3" of rain from Kyle on Sunday. The track of Kyle will be the key to its impact and it will be closely monitored.

Another NWS teleconference is scheduled for 2PM today, and an updated briefing will be provided to you afterwards. In the meantime, please contact me should you have any questions or need additional information.

Forwarded for your information,
Elaine

Rosie's Place is holding its annual Funny Women ... Serious Business event on October 16th at the Hynes Convention Center. Part of the contract with the Hynes is that they waive the room rental fee of $27,000 if we use their caterer, Aramark.

Aramark is facing job actions by its employees, Local 26, led by Janice Loux. While the contract issues have been settled everywhere in the U.S., they are still unsettled in Boston. Local 26 has contacted Rosie's Place and said that we will face a picket line at our event if we do not use another caterer than Aramark. Local 26 intimated they will be contacting our talent (Sarah Bernhard) to inform her of the picketing.

Subject: I'm sorry for what happened this morning...

Michael:

I heard a bit about what happened this morning after the meeting and want to apologize for and of the confusion that caused it. Following is a brief explanation of events that led up to what happened w/ Vivian Leonard and the Mayor this morning...

Please know there was absolutely no malice intended...and no-one was trying to pull anything over on the Mayor. The candidates were chosen based on their qualifications, their personal interviews, and their references.

- As was suggested in the Gartner study, we have been attempting to hire supplemental part-time employees to work in the Call Center for our "Go Live" date;
- TMM finally signed the Executive Order giving the okay to create and post for the new positions;
- Postings went up, resumes came in, candidates were interviewed, and 4 were hired by our deadline date of 8/1 (as G11/Step1; 19/hrs wk; $12.80/hr);
- They started after Labor Day by filling out HR paperwork, attending soft-skills training sessions, and doing side-by-sides with call takers;
- On 9/2 I sent TMM a memo "introducing the four new entry-level hires...";
- Apparently, Cathy Borgos called on the 3rd to tell me there was a package for me at the Mayor's Office;
- Rocco emailed me this message, but I'm guessing I checked the email while in a mtg...and then promptly forgot to pick up said package (the memo I'd sent);
- On 9/16 the paperwork went down to TMM from the budget office. He saw there was paperwork for 4 ppl but signed for only one (Xavier Good).
- C. Osgood and I then went to speak to the Mayor and found that he mistakenly thought the original memo said he should choose 1 of the 4 candidates;
- We then explained to him that, as per the plan, we were hiring 4 ppl and he became upset;
- TMM became further enraged when Vivian Leonard told him the 4 ppl already started working; that's what you caught the brunt of this morning.

Again, I'm sorry that events played out the way they did. None of it was intentional and no-one has tried to circumvent the system. To date, the four candidates chosen have worked out well. Two are younger, energetic college students; and the other two are more seasoned individuals who have had many years of experience out in the workforce.

I hope this is helpful for helping you to understand fully what happened. Let me know if you have any questions and/or concerns.

Thanks, - janine

Caution urged on Chinese dairy products

September 26, 2008

BOSTON

Massachusetts consumers should avoid infant formula, candy, and other products from China that contain milk because they may be contaminated, health authorities said yesterday. Although there is no proof that tainted products have been sold in the state, authorities are conducting tests to look for evidence of melamine, an industrial contaminant implicated in the deaths of four Chinese babies and the illnesses of 54,000 more.

Inspectors from the Boston Public Health Commission and the state Department of Public Health have visited stores looking for contaminated infant formula but have not found any, authorities said.
